Justice Among Strangers and the Justice of Neighbours:

Ethical Choice in Small and Large Medical Contexts

Benjamin Freedman

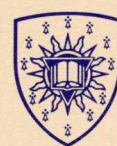

Benjamin Freedman is Professor at the McGill Centre for Medicine, Ethics and Law, and serves as Clinical Ethicist at the Sir Mortimer B. Davis-Jewish General Hospital of Montreal. He served from 1981-1986 as Associate for Bioethics at the Westminster Institute for Ethics and Human Values in London, Ontario. Dr. Freedman has taught at Queens College in New York, Yeshiva University, the New York Institute of Technology, and the Herzog Faculty of Law, Bar-Ilan University in Israel.

He has published over ninety articles, papers and books on such topics as informed consent, medical experimentation, the distribution of health resources and organ transplantation in professional, medical, philosophical and legal journals. Notable among his publications are "Equipoise and the Ethics of Clinical Research", which appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine (1987); and Ethical Issues in Clinical Obstetrics and Gynecology. He is co-editor of Moral Responsibility and the Professions. Dr. Freedman's continuing areas of research include research with human subjects, cross-cultural aspects of bioethics, and policy issues in national health insurance.
